life is to be feared from the present ex-cessive tendencies to immorality in young women. If the girls are pure and upright the young men can be saved; and if they are not, where is the backstay of society to be found? We do not believe that girls to be found? We do not believe that girls can be tramps, and still be women of untarnished character. The brightness and fineness of the moral tone will be impaired, if nothing more is done, and this keenness of feeling in regard to morals, the purity of a heart that thinks no evil because it is innocent of evil, is worth more than gold and rubies. It is a prise which makes women attractive even in the eyest of men who are bad. It needs to be brought home to parents, to guardians, to well meaning girls themselves, what character is worth, and how it may carelessly and I thoughtlessly be lost, and by uncessangly and personally working to amend a social evil it may be somewhat abated.
